Photographers of Wyoming

Man and horse in pond, ca. 1908. Charles J. Belden Collections, American Heritage Center.

Like many before them, C.D. Kirkland, J.E. Stimson, and Charles J. Belden created and successfully marketed images of a mythic West. Setting their photographs against a backdrop of spectacular scenery, they intentionally emphasized the more romantic aspects of ranching. All three were master photographers, and like good artists they used their work to tell a story. In addition their photographs provide a valuable historic record of ranching and life in Wyoming.

Size: 25 framed items (14" x 17" ea., 2 crates).

UNIVERSITY
OF WYOMING
American Heritage Center

The American Heritage Center (AHC) is the University of Wyoming's repository of manuscripts and special collections, rare books, and the university archives. Its collections focus on Wyoming and the Rocky Mountain West (including but not limited to politics, settlement, and western trails), environment and conservation, the mining and petroleum industries, air and rail transportation, the performing arts (particularly radio, television, film, and popular music), journalism, and US military history.

Students and scholars from around the globe use these collections for research. The AHC also sponsors a wide range of scholarly and popular programs including lectures, concerts, symposia, and exhibits. Housed in a landmark building shared with the University Art Museum, access to the AHC is free
