Wyoming Water

Visitors at Yellowstone's Upper Falls, 1880--F. J. Haynes, photographer. American Heritage Center Collections.

Wyoming Water: A Working Partner. The photographs in this section illustrate the partnership of Wyomingites and water to create a unique western lifestyle.

Wyoming Water: The Search for Enough. This section contains photographs which depict the route of the Oregon-California Trail through Wyoming, the Hayden Survey, and the construction of some of Wyoming's dams and reservoirs.

Wyoming Water: A Companion in Sport. In this section water is celebrated for its beauty and for its contribution to the pleasure of our leisure hours. Whether it is used or only admired, water never goes unappreciated. It remains the single most precious resource of the West.

Size: 90 framed items (3 crates).

UNIVERSITY
OF WYOMING
American Heritage Center

The American Heritage Center (AHC) is the University of Wyoming's repository of manuscripts and special collections, rare books, and the university archives. Its collections focus on Wyoming and the Rocky Mountain West (including but not limited to politics, settlement, and western trails), environment and conservation, the mining and petroleum industries, air and rail transportation, the performing arts (particularly radio, television, film, and popular music), journalism, and US military history.

Students and scholars from around the globe use these collections for research. The AHC also sponsors a wide range of scholarly and popular programs including lectures, concerts, symposia, and exhibits. Housed in a landmark building shared with the University Art Museum, access to the AHC is free
